Development Council

Organization of the Escanaba Development Council with in the Escanaba Chamber of Commerce has been stimulated by a mission of Escanaba leaders to Minneapolis recently under the leadership of Banker Fred Hodgdon.

The Council can do much good for the Escanaba Area and should be encouraged and supported. It has announced a study and action program on Escanaba business district parking as its first project and is now at work on it.

The choice of work area for a beginning is a good one. The City of Escanaba has a $10,000 standing fund for acquisition of off-the-street parking lots but an inactive program of lot acquisition. It is ready and willing, like Barcus, apparently, but not making costly opportunities for lot acquisition because the city has many other demands upon its purse and money not spent on parking lots can be spent on street improvement.

This money comes from parking meter fees, which provide the city with about $20,000 net yearly. The city government, Chamber of Commerce, retailers and other elements of the community have had go-arounds on this matter before. The Development Council, in this and other community situations, should be able to serve as a catalyst to bring together all the elements and get action.

Escanaba has made progress in provision of parking space for shoppers and its situation isn't bad compared with other municipalities, but the city's present parking development policy lacks dynamism. It's static. Shopping is never static; it's always changing its habits and going somewhere to spend its money. If Escanaba wants to create a shopping habit it must compete, and one of the most sensitive areas is accessibility. That means parking. When the streets are parked full of shopper cars there must be room for more off the streets.

The city has a stake in this problem because a prosperous retailing district is one of its civic assets and tax valuations rest upon it.

The Development Council's early meetings have indicated directions. It wants more membership, more representative membership. It is not only desirable for the added talents and representation it will bring to the Council, but it is imperative if Area Redevelopment Administration funds are to be available for the projects it recommends. ARA insists on broad representation in planning for government-aided projects.

The Council plans committees on community beautification, education, and taxes. It regards the retention of a community planning consultant like Elmer Krieger of Hubertus, Wis., who made Escanaba's master development plan in the 1949, as indispensable to orderly community development.

The Council's nucleus of men who made the Minneapolis mission were impressed by urban redevelopment there. It saw what the Minneapolis Housing and Redevelopment Authority had done in transforming the Glenwood Area, one of the most run-down neighborhoods in the city, into one of the city's prides. Similar progress has been made elsewhere and more is planned.

In Detroit a huge redevelopment program is underway in the heart of the city. Such projects essentially represent determination of the communities' leaders to better them, not the spending of a new affluence on replacement, but a willful and courageous venture into betterment as a means to more affluence and income.

Government, charged by the people with the keeping of the public purse, tends to become conservative because change may raise taxes and the voters may punish the office holders. This situation makes citizen groups useful in stimulating government action. Development councils serve usefully in this field.

The Doctor Says:

Grownups Get Rickets Too

By Dr. Wayne G. Brandstet, M.D.

Q — What causes osteomalacia?

Can it be helped?

A—Osteomalacia is a failure of proper bone formation. In children it is called "rickets." In adults "osteomalacia." It may be due to an insufficient intake of vitamin D, or failure of the digestive tract to absorb the vitamin D in the diet.

Since the body makes its own vitamin D when the skin is exposed to sunlight, insufficient exposure to sunlight may be a contributing factor.

Another factor may be a decrease in the blood level of calcium or phosphorus. The chief manifestations are loss of appetite, pain in the bones, softening of the bones with deformity, weakness, kidney stones, and infection of the urinary tract.

Treatment usually consists of giving calcium in the form of milk, with supplementary doses of calcium lactate, gluconate, or chloride. Vitamin D is also given, but should not be continued after the disease is cured, since too much vitamin D can do harm.

If failure of absorption of vitamin D is due to a persistent diarrhea, this must be controlled before the treatment can be effective. If the disease is due to too great a loss of calcium through the kidneys, calcium gluconate and sodium citrate should be given.

In any case, skillful management by your doctor should bring about lasting improvement.

Q—What laxative do you recommend for older persons? I have to take something every day.

A—You must have been absent from school the day I talked about the harmful effects of laxatives.

You and any others who come in late, I will say that eating the amount of vegetable and fruit that you usually require to produce stool will obviate the need of taking any laxative. I worry about skipping a day. If you go 48 to 72 hours without a bowel movement, use an eight-ounce warm water enema which you must hold for at least five minutes before passing. If you have to take an enema more than once a week, see your doctor.

Q—A friend and I are having an argument about multiple sclerosis and arteriosclerosis. Please tell us the symptoms of each and how they differ.

A—The symptoms of both diseases are so variable that no definite answer can be given to this question.

Multiple sclerosis is a process in which the insulating myelin sheath surrounding individual nerve fibers is lost. The symptoms depend on whether the nerve fibers involved carry motor impulses to the brain, and what part of the body the affected nerves supply.

Arteriosclerosis is hardening of the arteries. It starts at birth and continues throughout life. Until the process becomes far advanced it produces no symptoms and, since it is not a uniform process, it may affect the heart in some and the brain or kidneys in others.

When sufficiently advanced, it may seriously reduce the blood supply to the affected organ, or small hemorrhages may occur. In either case, the function of the affected organ would be seriously impaired.

Auto Production Down This Week

DETROIT (AP)—Passenger car production in the U.S. dropped to an estimated 162,639 units this week, as compared to the previous week figure—a 1963 high—of 170,621, according to Automotive News.

The industry turned out its 3-millionth 1963 model car this week, as total production climbed to 3,063,763. This was nearly a quarter of a million ahead of last year's figure of 2,819,968 at the same approximate date.

Edson In Washington

By PETER EDSON

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—The $1,000-a-plate Republican dinner honoring Arizona Sen. Barry Goldwater for his past services as GOP Senate Campaign Committee Chairman did just that. They gave him a silver coffee urn—but otherwise the affair was a political dud.

Nobody's presidential candidacy balloons rocketed off the launching pads even an inch. There was so much party unity and peaceful coexistence displayed that the proceedings were a bit dull.

Nobody could have cared less that the honeymooning Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York and his bride weren't there.

Gov. George Romney of Michigan confessed that the "unexpected developments he ran into" after his Chamber of Commerce speech in Washington the week before—the launching of a presidential boom for him, which he repudiated—had almost caused him to cancel plans to attend the dinner.

Goldwater didn't even mention the 1964 presidential race.

So the party was an exclusive social affair, a financial success—and that's all.

Wit and humor from the big list of speakers who paid their tributes to Goldwater evoked polite laughter and applause but did not rock the rafters or send the Republicans out into the night looking for Democrats to draw and quarter. Maybe that's why the GOP doesn't win more elections.

Sen. Thurston Morton of Kentucky was toastmaster in his role as chairman of the Senate Campaign Committee. He got off a few good cracks in introducing about half—it seemed—of the 500 guests present. Like:

"Uncle Billy Young (Sen. Milton R. Young of North Dakota) hasn't been up this late in years." And—

"I regret that I have to present a flaming liberal to this audience—the ranking Republican of the House Rules Committee—Clarence Brown of Ohio."

"I've been trying to keep these speeches short, but I don't know what we can do to cut down on the next speaker, because he's my leader—Sen. Everett Dirksen of Illinois."

Dirksen related that in August 1952 he was told of an Arizona businessman who ought to be in politics. He went out to Phoenix, visited the Goldwaters and "that night, under a starry sky, I persuaded Barry Goldwater to run for the Senate. I take some credit for being the midwife who brought him into political life."

Responding later, Goldwater observed, "I guess I didn't realize what happened on that penthouse roof. I guess I'd better get a hot line to Margaret Sanger."

Expressing regret that Pres-

Lots of girls who know how to swim will be taught by lifeguards this summer.

dent Eisenhower could not attend the memorable dinner, Goldwater confessed, "I rode into office on Ike's coattails."

The senator also read a telegram from his daughter Peggy, "Sorry I can't be there, but my allowance won't stretch."

Goldwater paid tribute to Romney as "a man who felt there was something more important to do for America than just live in it."

Romney, for his part, delivered a condensed version of the same speech he had made to the Chamber of Commerce the week before. With a different audience, it didn't go over so well. His most inspiring line was a quotation from Henry Ford the First who, after listening to three and a half hours of oratory at the dedication of Willow Run Airport, hobbled to the mike and said, "I can't talk, but I'll do all I can."

Rep. Bob Wilson of California, chairman of the House Republican Campaign Committee, related that, "Every so often, Senator Goldwater comes over to California and cries about the water we rightfully take from the Colorado River. So I ask all the House members present to rise and toast our guest of honor with a glass of water."
